Course Objective: How do we study & assess American democracy?

This course offers an introduction to the systematic and meticulous study of American politics. Building on the scientific foundation of political science, this course is designed to provide an understanding into the behavior of citizens and institutions operating within the national framework of American government. The main question motivating the course is a simple, yet complex one: how well does the American political system live up to the ideals of a representative democracy? Recognizing that representative democracy requires engaged citizens and responsive institutions, the motivating question of the course hinges on understanding:

- How does James Madison’s “Republic” provide the fundamental theory that justifies the representative framework which underlies the American political system and what are the role of citizens and elites within this “ideal” framework?

- How do individual citizens make political decisions, such as which candidate to vote for and what policies & political positions (preferences) to hold? What are the implications of how citizens make decisions for Madison’s framework and the function of democracy?

- What incentives motivate how elected elites (politicians) behave within the institution (i.e. the Congress and the presidency) in which they serve and what are the implications of differing incentives across institutions for responsiveness (policymaking)? How does collective institutional behavior, such as gridlock, fit into Madison’s view of democracy?

These thematic questions may seem daunting, but this course will give you the necessary framework to perform careful political and social science analysis to gain leverage on these questions. This course will provide not only an understanding of how to think of the quality of American democracy but also how to engage in careful social science analysis. This course emphasizes the tools you need to assess political behaviors, practices, and institutions based on theory and evidence. Welcome to the class!

Course Logistics & Requirements

This section of the syllabus serves a guide for course expectations (both for me and for you) and logistical information such as grade breakdown and course texts.

Course Texts & Announcements: There is one assigned textbook for this course and the citation can be found below:

The Course GitPage contains all lectures, supplemental readings, and exam study guides in the interactive syllabus. Course announcements will be made through Canvas.

Grade Breakdown:

- 75% Midterm & Final Exam
- 25% Seminar Participation & Research Participation

Exams: The midterm & final exam will feature two main components: short answer and essay. The short answer component will be both the definition and significance of a concept discussed in lecture and in the readings. The essays will require the student to use the course concepts to develop an argument in response to stated essay question. This includes a thesis statement and supporting evidence for the thesis statement. Study guides will be provided a week before the exam along with “what constitutes an excellent” short answer and essay. The midterm is worth 35% while the cumulative final exam is worth 40%.

Make-Up Exams: I understand that throughout a quarter many exogenous, unanticipated events, may occur that would require the makeup of an exam. This course offers flexibility for administration of the midterm exam for whatever reason, independent of proper documentation such as a doctor’s note. However, makeup examinations will consist of a robust single essay written during a ninety minute window. However, per university policy, the final exam cannot be given early and will be administered during the schedule time found on the 1Note that I have designed the course so that readings in the syllabus correspond to both the Third Edition and the Second Edition of the textbook.

Make-up final exams outside of this final exam period will require formal documentation and coordination at least a week in advance.

Seminar Participation & Research Participation: As stated earlier, there will be unannounced individual and group activities used to both 1) stimulate discussion during seminar and 2) assess student comprehension of a given day’s concepts. These exercises will be done through an online survey hosted by Poll Everywhere. These participation exercises will be incorporated into every other lecture and will be graded based on whether a student participated or not. Students may participate on a computer or over mobile text. Thus, attendance is critical to getting full points for the seminar participation. On the other hand, research participation entails participation in a graduate student political science project outside of the seminar period. Details will be explained in class and participation will be equivalent for two seminar participation activities in weight.

Academic Dishonesty & Ethics: This course is about developing critical thought and developing personalized skill-sets necessary to examine politics in a systematic and rigorous way. Thus, it is important to develop your own arguments and work to hone in analytical skills. Academic dishonesty is not only a serious breach of ethics in the university community, but it is also detrimental to your scholarly growth. Ethics breaches, such as cheating and plagiarism, will be referred to the Office of Student Judicial Affairs. Students may refer to the University’s Code of Academic Conduct for further clarification or may conduct the instructor for any specific questions.

Course Resources: If accommodations are needed for you to succeed in this course, please speak with me and we will work together to make sure you are accommodated. If you are unsure if you need accommodations, please visit the UC Davis SDC site. On another note, I highly recommend taking advantage of the great campus resources offered by the Student Academic Success Center for strategies on how to succeed not only in this course but throughout your tenure here.

Successful Strategies for the Systematic Study of Politics

This section of the syllabus provides successful strategies on how to succeed in this course.

Note on Reading Scholarly Articles: After the foundational section, many of the readings in subsequent sections will be academic in nature. I understand that, as an introductory seminar, these works may contain empirical analysis that may seem daunting and confusing to read (i.e. lots of equations & statistics). I will convey the article’s findings at length in lecture. The only expectation from you is to read the article carefully before seminar, attempt to understand the article’s main argument (this includes that political phenomena does the article’s argument seek to explain), how the article’s findings fits with the theory presented, and what the implications of the author’s empirical findings are for the function of democracy/course concepts. I will provide a checklist that outlines how to read these works for content and using the content in seminar discussion.

Expectations: Students can expect me to come prepared to seminar. This entails that students can expect me to give a strong effort to convey the given seminar’s course concepts and the implications these concepts have for the main questions highlighted in the course description. This seminar will be taught in a dynamic fashion which will require full participation from everyone in the seminar. As such, most lectures will incorporate activities designed to stimulate student involvement and gage comprehension of the material. It is critical that everyone (including me) is prepared to discuss the seminar’s assigned reading for that day and come ready to discuss the concepts and how what implications these concepts have for assessing the quality of American democracy.

Coming Prepared: Each seminar will introduce new theories that, in one way or another, will provide different conceptions of what the ideals of democracy should be. It is critical that you (and I) do the assigned readings before the class. Useful class discussion is conditional on both of us doing the readings, being familiar with the reading’s argument/main points, and engaging the theories presented during that week. After understanding these different theories of democracy, we will evaluate whether the American political system as constructed works well or is in need of valuable reform. The better we prepare, the better we can assess our democracy.

Keeping an Open-Mind & Importance of Questions: It is critical to both challenge partisan predispositions and other biases we may hold, even if that means confronting powerful myths that can bias our perceptions and assessments. Assessing whether our democracy functions well requires questioning everything, both of the theories themselves and my interpretation of them. Intellectual curiosity and asking questions is both a strong and desirable virtue. Asking questions and engaging in a conversation by sharing your ideas and thoughts help strengthen our assessments.

Course Road-Map

This section of the syllabus outlines the course schedule & readings². The course will be divided into three distinct sections outlined in the course objective. Understanding of these three questions will help assess the behavior of citizens and institutions and the implications these behaviors have for the functioning of the American political system as a representative democracy. It is imperative that you treat each section as a part of a framework by which we judge the functioning of American democracy. Each section objective articulates the role of the section within the framework

²Each seminar slideset and supplemental material will be uploaded before seminar on the Course GitPage
1. Madison’s Republic: Foundation of American Democracy

Section Objective: Madison’s theory of representative democracy, outlined in Federalist 10 & 51, outlines the justification for the American constitution and our representative form of government. This section provides an understanding of the motivation underpinning a representative form of democracy, centered around Madison’s argument about human nature, how representatives behave in political life, and the consequences of Madison’s argument on political change. Ask yourself, is Madison’s Republic democratic relative to other forms of democracy and how well does this theory explain the American system today?

1. Meeting 1: Course Overview & “First-Attempts” at American Democracy
   - Kollman Text: Chapter 1: Introduction
   - The Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union. 1777.

   - Madison, James. 1787. “Federalist 10.” In United States Congress Resources

3. Meeting 3: Madison’s Theory: Self-Interest & Ambition as the Solution
   - Reread: Madison, James. 1787. “Federalist 10.” In United States Congress Resources
   - Madison, James (or Alexander Hamilton). 1788. “Federalist 51.” In United States Congress Resources
   - Constitution of the United States. 1788. Particular emphasis on Articles I, II, IV, & VI.

2. Citizen Political Behavior: Functioning as Critical Principals

Section Objective: It’s clear that Madison’s Republic posits an important role for citizens in a representative democracy. This section highlights how citizens function as principals of their elected representatives (i.e. agents). This section provides an understanding of which type of citizens participate in politics, what the incentives are to be “disengaged” from the political process, how well elections work, and what role parties play (if any) in helping citizens make political decisions. Pay close attention to some key questions. What are the implications of the “disengagement” incentive for the functioning of Madison’s Republic? Do elections help citizens make a more “representative” form of government and how do we know when they do? How does party theory challenge Madison’s republic? And, perhaps the most important question, is an informed electorate NECESSARY for Madison’s theory to work?

1. Meeting 4: Variation in Citizen Participation: Resources and Free-Riding Incentive
   - Kollman Text: Chapter 10: Political Participation

2. Meeting 5: Developing Political Preferences: Citizen Self-Interest

3. Meeting 6: Overcoming Limited Information: How Citizens use Short-Cuts to Act

• Kollman Text: Chapter 9: Public Opinion

4. Meeting 7: Electoral Dynamics: The Role of Campaign Context in Voting Choice

• Kollman Text: Chapter 13: Elections & Campaigns

5. Meeting 8: Parties in the Electorate: Helping Citizens Make Political Decisions at a Trade-off

• Optional: Kollman Text: Chapter 12: Political Parties: Sections: What are Parties? & In Comparison: Parties

Meeting 11: Midterm Examination (July 17, 2017)
3: Post-Election: How Institutions Function within the Framework

Section Objective: This section turns our focus from citizens, the principals in a representative democracy, to elected representatives, the agents. This section focuses on two institutions, the Congress and the Executive, and assesses the incentives they have to be faithful agents for voters and whether they provide accurate political representation. This section wraps up with a discussion on collective institutional behavior. That is, how do the differing electoral incentives found in Congress and the Presidency inherently create a status quo bias? How does polarization exasperate this bias, what types of citizens get represented, and is the system in need of reform in light of Madison’s theory?

1. Meeting 12: Congressional Incentives: Representation & Getting Re-Elected

- Kollman Text: Chapter 5: Congress: Section: Congressional Elections.

3. Meeting 14: Change in Representation: Are Citizens Represented in the System?

\(^3\)Apologies in advance for the comprehensive reading list, this is a big question and one of my substantive areas of interest. Please, if you have time, skim the two optional articles.
4. Meeting 15: The Presidency: At-Large Constituency & Presidential Representation

5. Meeting 16: Executive-Legislative Bargaining: Inherent Status-Quo Bias

6. Meeting 17: Polarization: Implications for Policymaking & Accountability

7. Meeting 18: How Democratic is the U.S.? Policy Responsiveness

8. Meeting 19: Reform Needed? Potential Reforms from Comparative Systems

Meeting 21: Final Exam (August 2, 2017)
